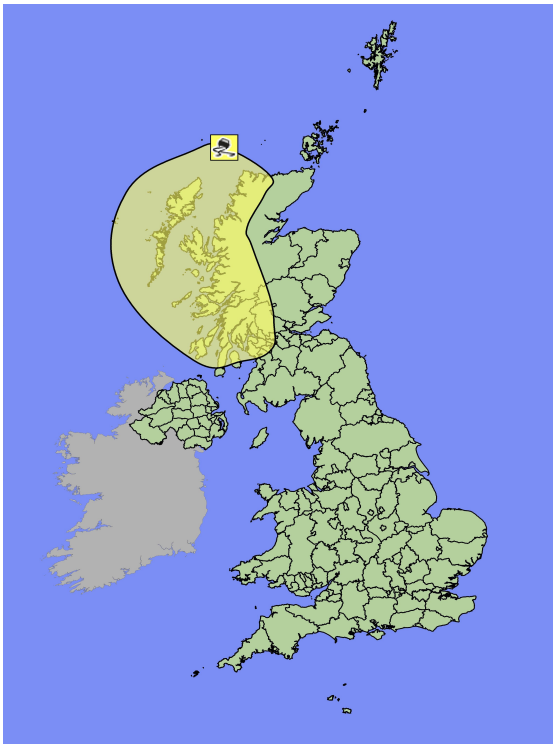
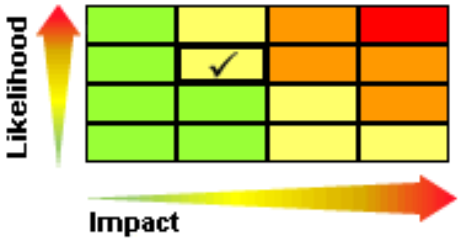
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
After the mild conditions of New Year's Eve, colder air will sweep south, with some wintry showers as early as Sunday evening. By Monday morning road surface temperatures away from coastal areas are likely to have fallen below zero, bringing the risk of ice, especially where rain or sleet has fallen.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Alert of Ice

Valid from 00:00 on Mon, 02nd Jan 2012 until 11:00 on Mon, 02nd Jan 2012

A wintry mix of rain, sleet and snow showers will lead to icy stretches on roads and pavements on Monday morning. A few cm of snow is likely, generally above about 200 m, though with the risk of some at lower levels too. Accumulations of 10-15 cm are likely above about 400 m.
